Will it be best to let these planted by May 10. Am expecting sevhad 200 pounds of acid phosphate an acre. Where I turned rye and used no fertilizer I will probably get fifty bushels an acre. Finest prospect for corn I have ever seen here, and cattle off the grass are selling for 7th cents a pound. I saw to-day 250 two-year-old steers sold for $69 a head. This is very good news from Bland, a fine grazing section, for I have bought feeders from there myself years ago. Now, as to your question. The risk it seems to me is that the crimson clover self-sown so early in summer may run into bloom this fall, and that, of course, will end it. If it stands through I would keep the clovers and turn them for corn in the spring. Or you can turn the sod now and sow rye and crimson clover seed the middle of August and have a far better crop to August and have a far better crop to turn for corn than by sowing rye alone. You say that rye is the only winter

You say that rye is the only winter cover crop that can be turned early enough in your section for corn. True, the clover will not be in bloom in Bland to turn for corn to be planted early in May. But, nevertheless, it will have made growth enough to pay well for the sowing, and certainly a better crop than rye alone. But if I had a chance to see the field and the amount of red clover on the land I might controllers it will not, for there is very little scluble natter in the went mineral fertilizer is wonderful. They say that it is all plant food, but I notice in the analysis they give that nearly 75 per cent of it is silica and alumnia, sand and clay, and while pure sand and pure clay may make something to hold plant food, which we do not need to buy them. Then they say it does not burn the seed. Shotten strength of red clover on the land I might cona chance to see the field and the amount of red clover on the land I might consider it best to let the clover alone and depend on it for the winter cover. It will certainly pay well for farmers in your section to look after the improvement of their grass when feeders are in demand at 7½ cents. I have bought them years ago for 3 cents.

"I want to know the best kind of cats to sow with crimson clover for an early hay crop to come off with the clover." There are a number of varieties of winter oats sown in the South, but for Virginia gray turf onts. Then, as a hay crop to come off with the clover, no oats will be mature in time for that, for the clover should be cut as soon as fairly in bloom, and without any regard to the condition of the many are rubbing off the condition of the clover.

The condition of the inition of the clover in the spring is to buy plants grown in pots. These are now largely sold by seedsmen and nurserymen, and they can be turned out and planted at any time, and will make a good growth in the fall and bear well the next season. I have sown seed of strawherries in the greenhouse in spring and potted the little plants and grew them strong and set them out in the fall and had every plant to make a good crop in the spring. Of course, it is rather costly to plant the potted plants en any large scale, but for home use it pays very well to get these plants.

Crimson Clover Seed.

I stated some time back that I would be afraid to trust the imported crimson clover seed, brought in last fall and carried over. A Richmond seedsman took exception to what I said, and claimed that the carried-over seed, might even be better. I cannot agree to this, but after his objection I did test some of the carried-over seed, and was surprised to find that they germinated nearly 20 per cent. This percentage could not be expected from sowing in the open ground, but the test shows that there is a strong germinating power in the seed. These seed are now selling at my home town for $4.50 per bushel, which is lower than the seed have started for several years. The home seed crop of crimson clover on the Maryland-Delaware peninsula is practically a complete fail-

FOURTEEN-INNING TIE

Brooklyn, August 15.—The final game of the series between the Dodgers and the Pirates was called on account of darkness, after both clubs had fought stubbornly for fourteen innings to a 3 to 3 tie. The Dodgers scored twice in the first on a walk, a single. Viox's error of Stengel's grounder and Stengel's tallying on the second out. The Dahlenites added another run in the fourth on a bunt, a steal, a wild throw and Fisher's single. A single by Viox, J. Miller's triple and a wild throw netted the Pirates two runs in the sixth. They tied the score in the ninth on a walk and two singles. The score:
